Canadian Helen Keller Award

The Canadian Helen Keller Award is a national public awareness project launched in 2005 to recognize the extraordinary contributions made by individuals and organizations to assist the hearing and visually impaired population in Canada. It is part of the Canadian Foundation for Physically Disabled Persons' long running campaign to change the way Canadians think about physical disabilities.

The Canadian Helen Keller Centre is the only training centre for the deaf-blind in Canada. It is associated with another project of the Canadian Foundation for Physically Disabled Persons; Rotary Cheshire Homes, the world's only barrier free home for the deaf-blind. On April 1, 2016, both of these organizations merged together and is called the Canadian Helen Keller Centre.
